MISSOULA--

Terry Warren, Kalispell, junior music-education major at the University of Montana, has returned from a week-long (Jan. 8-12) seminar at the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

Warren was one of 40 students selected nationally to attend. He was chosen on the basis of faculty recommendation, interest in music history, and grade transcripts.

He studies voice with Patrick Williams of the UM faculty.

The students who participated in the seminar attended Met rehearsals for the opera "Don Carlo," by Verdi. They were given an overall picture of the running of a large urban opera company. The students were taken through the process of set construction and design. They toured the backstage, talked with costumers and were shown a multitude of rehearsal procedures. Following each day of observance the students met with James Levine, the conductor of the opera, and John Dexter, the executive producer, who went over the day's events and answered questions from the group.

Warren is the son of Denver and Wavelene Warren, Kalispell.
